It is therefore, clear that our interests and welfare do not coincide with P's conception of the welfare & interest of Muslims in

In her oft-proclaimed anxiety to rescue the 3 million Muslims from what she describes as the tyranny of a handful of Hindus in the State, P evidently is prepared to sacrifice the interests of 40 million Muslims in India.

India by committing such a folly would be playing strait into the hands of P.

The CP so far as India is concerned, except during the war, has been more or less a secret party whose workings I do not know. He indicated that the P. party was not likely to enter into any working agreement with the CP for contesting the coming general elections. hypothetical question. I feel that no human agency can reform the Cong.

The services of those who are not the representatives of the people must be utilised for special work. If persons however eminent are chosen who are not representatives of the people, their inclusion a cabinet except in exceptional cases would defeat democracy.

Mine is not mere opposition to the Congress, I will not form any party merely for the sake of defeating the Cong.

My difficulties are very great, and these are especially organisational ones. I am satisfied that the people do want a change, but mass support means nothing unless it is organised. I would prefer to remain as the head of the organisation without contesting the elections, but if my party insists I will have to. If T'nad accepts me I shall be very happy to stand for T. — she replied jocularly. Will you scrap all controls? Does anybody scrap off everything. -- administrative inefficiency

Today we oppose the misrule of our own people and very often of those who had been our companions in the struggle for freedom.

In politics, as in religion, the internal enemy is more formidable than the external enemy, because the internal enemy appears in the garb of a friend.

We must try to purify ourselves after finding out the defects.

It is impossible to release the Cong from the clutches of permit holders & licence-holders. The Cong. can not fill this role.

The vacillating economic policy of the Govt has resulted in deficit budgets, shyness of capital, uncertainty of investments and lower per capita income.

Service to the people is its goal.
